

THE FORGOTTEN WAR

A cute, media-manufactured phrase used to describe French, Indians and English slaughtering each other in the name of ...

and that's really the story, isn't it.

In the name of what?

The Indians needed all us foreigners gone.

We know how that turned out.

We foreigners needed Indians to help us slaughter each other.

The winner, of course, would dominate the New World.

That's heady stuff – domination. Sure beats subjugation.

Of course, who said there had to be the one or the other.

Wasn't "living in peace" a possibility?

We know the answer to that one, too.

So, they fought a 7-year-long war we remember – or not - as the Forgotten War.

The Forgotten War.

The War to End Wars.

The Great War.

In my lifetime alone:

The Cold War

The Korean War

The Viet Nam War

Gulf War I

Gulf War II

The Iraq War

The Afghanistan War

Beirut

Lybia

Blackhawk Down

Grenada

Panama

On and on and fucking on ...
